Child Labor Laws

As a result of the Industrial Revolution, the United States has laws called child labor laws. These laws are meant to protect children from being exposed to dangerous working conditions.

The minimum age of employment is 14. However, children can work in the entertainment industry and work as newspaper delivery people. Children can also work on their parent's farm in non-hazardous working conditions.

Children under 18 cannot work performing certain jobs. These include coal mining, metal working, meat packing, demolition work, roofing work, or any work performed on dangerous machinery.

Many states also have child labor laws. Before applying for a job, you should check the child labor laws of your state.
